Giunchigliani receives “Leadership Award for Advocacy”

Recognition comes from work in advancing environmentally sound construction practices says Las Vegas chapter of US
Green Building Council

Chris Giunchigliani, candidate for Clark County Commission, District E, was recognized Friday night for her work in advancing green building practices in Nevada.

Green building refers to residential and commercial structures which reduce dependence on gas, electricity, water or other common utilities. The structures also use sustainable building materials or recycled building materials in their construction or advance the use of LEED standards.

In accepting the award Giunchigliani said, “There are wonderful new ways to look at construction which save money and save our environment. Our rapid growth in Clark County demands that we pay closer attention to how we build as well as what we build.”

Giunchigliani was honored with the Leadership Award for Advocacy, Outstanding Individual. She was cited for “the passion and commitment” in making a significant contribution towards the advancement of green building in our region.
